

Planting English Bluebells, Snowdrops and more

It's not too late to plant Native Spring bulbs:

Bulbs are popping up all over the UK, with early Snowdrops and Winter aconites already in flower depending on the location.

But there is still time to plant, so you and your wildlife garden don't need to miss out! It's ideal weather to get outdoors and add some of our potted wildflower bulbs to your garden. Easy to plant outdoors as they are already rooted and starting to shoot, so perfect in a border, outdoor container, or woodland. Choose from Snowdrops, Wild daffodils, Tenby daffodils and English bluebells plus more.

Look for the full range here in our woodland and bulb section on the website.

Why not check out our full wildflower range too, we already have some of our summer wildflowers in stock and ready to plant.

Order your Wild garlic now:

Our potted Wild garlic in 1 litre containers can now be ordered in advance, for delivery at the end of February / early March. Click here

Wild garlic is more popular than ever with an increased interest in growing vegetables and herbs. It is also a sought after wild foraging food, as both flowers and leaves are edible. The bright green leaves appear in March and the flowers a little later from April. so why not plant some in your garden to grow your own food from home.

A few tips:

- Choose a damp but not waterlogged area, or plant in a container.
- Look for a spot in shade or part shade.
- Only collect a few leaves at a time, using scissors to cut rather than tearing the leaves.
- Pop in the fridge in an airtight container or sealed bag to keep for a few days

We've got Valentines day covered:

A lovely gift for the special gardener in your life
